

Felix Finkbeiner, founder of the student initiative Plant-for-the-Planet, has been invited as a speaker by the United Nations

Saturday January 29, 2011

13 year old boy addresses the United Nations in New York with a speech to open the International Year of Forests

The student initiative Plant-for-the-Planet founded four years ago by Felix Finkbeiner in Germany with children active in more than 90 countries already attracts attention all over the world.

On February 2nd the 13 year old Felix will hold a speech in New York at the opening of the International Year of Forests of the United Nations. Special about that: Felix has been invited from the United Nations to speak for the children of the world in the hall of the United Nations General Assembly.

He will use this opportunity to call on the adults one more time and more rigorous than ever to start acting to fight the climate crisis and he will call on the children of the world to join in the fight for their future.

Furthermore Felix will visit several schools in New York and Washington D.C., plant trees together with the children and educate them to ambassadors for Climate Justice.

<http://www.goforwood.info/en/news.php?id=33129>